About the speaker

Adrian de Villiers was born in Pretoria in 1972 and was schooled at Pretoria Boys High School.

In 1997, he obtained his Bachelor's degree in Architecture at the University of Pretoria.

He is currently enrolled in a Master's program on 'Conservation of the built environment' with the University of Cape Town.

From 1998, Adrian worked as a registered professional architect in a number of Pretoria architectural practices, until he joined the National Department of Public Works in 2010.

He holds the position as Chief Architect, Heritage Advisory Services, a sub-directorate of Architectural Services.

His duties chiefly involve working with consultants and departmental officials on renovation projects which involve the Department's numerous historic buildings.

From time to time, he is also called on to advice with regard to the Department's collections of historic furniture and art.

From a young age, his personal interests, apart from a love for the natural environment, have always been connected with the conservation and repair of historic objects, whether these be mechanical objects, furniture, clocks or antique reed organs.
